- Cover page.Title: Domestic violence and children author: John Green
Tutor: Professor W.M. Johnson
- Abstract. Studies show that children exposed to domestic abuse are at a higher risk of being abusive in the future. Moreover, scientists state that parents that express violence at their homes are more likely to be abusive and violent with their children. This study will focus on ways domestic violence influences mental health and future life views of children, as well as ways to prevent it. This research paper was crafted based on the reports of experienced scientists in the area as well as statements of the focus group participants.
- Table of contents.
- Introduction. Domestic violence is a never-ending battle of our society. It has always existed, but it seems that it is spreading today more than ever. People used to believe that the level of domestic violence is directly connected to the financial and social status. However, as studies show these days, it happens across all social groups and among people from various countries.NSPCC states that most of the violent acts against children take place at their homes (around 78%).
Mention other statistics of domestic violence across the globe.
Talk about the sources of information you used in your paper.
State the results of your study.
- Methods. Explain what people were involved in your focus groups.
Talk about scientists whose works you used in your research.
Mention the main focus of your study you tried to achieve with these methods.
- Results. Announce the results using figures, statistical data, and charts.
Talk about errors and mistakes you made along the way.
- Discussion. Explain why your research is of any significance.
Talk about different ways you can apply the results in real life.
Mention why you made these mistakes and specify your future plans in the niche.
- Conclusion. Restate the thesis statement you mentioned in the beginning.
Remind the reader about the methods, approaches, and technologies you used to achieve your primary goals.
Show practical ways you can apply the results of your study.
- Bibliography. List all the sources you used in the paper in alphabetical order.
- Appendix. Here go all the images, charts, tables, and other visual content you used in the research paper.
